Note If you buy a copy of Photoshop CS6, you also receive a copy of the Adobe Illustrator program. So if you know how to use Illustrator, you're able to quickly turn a photo into something you can use as a graphic element. For more on Illustrator, see the Note on page 553. The best way to learn how to use Photoshop is to take a few lessons, usually free online, from a member of the Adobe Photoshop Design Web site (`www.adobe.com/photoshophelp`). They can help you figure out which settings make the photo look good before you start thinking about changing things around or introducing new edits. The site is a great resource, but it doesn't teach every tool that's available in Photoshop. ## Editing Images: Before You Take a Screenshot Adobe Photoshop, Elements, and the rest of the Adobe imaging program suite have hundreds of features that enable you to edit images. Before you launch Photoshop, take a moment to play around with the tools and settings in a new project file. Save the file to disk. Take a screenshot of your image in Photoshop, open it in a text editor, and see how it looks without your photo's original settings. Then try again. Save your file and take another screenshot, and compare the two. These steps let you know what settings are the best for getting the kind of results you want. You can use these steps whenever you want to

What is it with alt-rag SPAM attacks these days? We've just begun to deal with the spam that will spring up in the wake of yesterday's (now fixed) dupe-call spam, and now this. New York Times blogger Paul Krugman has taken the time to scan what appears to be a fairly recent "spam surge" and check out the eggheads and trolls and political activists and religious nutballs getting in on the action – and it's not pretty: Back in the real world, what this means is that it is far from clear, even to someone with some experience of these things, when a given spam thread is a phishing site, a real site with a conversation to be had about the topic, a spoof site with a political or religious message, a genuine site with a message, or some combination of the three. My guesses: to the left, most sites seem to be phishing, right, religious sites? ok, to the right. And while we have those guesses, we also know that about 70% of the domain names that send out spam are in the US, and the majority are "chained" together so that they form search engine spam in a single domain. That means that most spam will come from domains that are big in the US, and that the economy of spam can operate in a very different time zone than the economy of Real Life. Which means that even if you shut down an entire top-level domain today, the people running that domain will not be out of business for three years, because they can operate using a network of subdomains, and even if you shut down those, they can keep operating by going through a mix of servers and subdomains, which may or may not all be located in the same country. I don't have any clue if anyone will read this far. I had to play with the formatting a little, because the DAG is in a pdf format, and then scanned in. See? We're not even getting into the idea that the US has a system of "freedom of speech" that may be incompatible with any such system.How can I run an IRIS scan without using the IDE? IRIS scans can be run via the command line, using the $iprescan command in a UNIX script. This is most useful if you wish to automate the process and therefore run the

Christine Blasey Ford is being harassed and her life is in danger, according to her attorney. Blasey Ford's "life is in danger," according to her lawyer, as she became a target of a smear campaign after accusing Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh of sexual assault. Attorney Debra Katz said that the event's with Blasey Ford was to "help her feel safe," after Blasey Ford became a target of a smear campaign by the Republicans and its allies. "She is being hounded, her safety is threatened, her family's safety is threatened by individuals who are whipping up false information about her," said Katz in an interview with MSNBC's Ari Melber. "I can't describe to you the impact this is having on her life and her safety," Katz added. Katz has also accused the media of "instilling fear" in Blasey Ford, adding that the "toxic environment that is being whipped up." "I believe that the media have contributed to it," she said. "They are instilling fear in her." "I just know this to be true," she added. "There are other people who have seen this who are afraid to speak out." She explained that Blasey Ford's life is "in danger." "I have seen that firsthand," she said. "I have talked to women, I have talked to men, I have talked to moms. They all agree that she's being harassed, that her life is in danger." Blasey Ford has accused Kavanaugh of sexually assaulting her in the 1980s at a high school party. Kavanaugh has denied all allegations of wrongdoing. Senator Lindsey Graham (R-South Carolina) said last week that he will not vote for Kavanaugh because the "left is nuts." "I am not going to defend people who are so, so far outside the mainstream, that their conduct is not only unchristian but un-American," Graham told Fox News. Graham has also said, "If this is the best the Democrats can do, then we should change the rules, call the FBI in,
